"Effective Testosterone Suppression For Prostate Cancer: Is There A Best Castration Therapy?"

NEEDS ASSESSMENT:

Prostate cancer remains the second-leading cause of cancer-related mortality in the US. Many clinical trials have shown the effectiveness of androgen suppression therapy against prostate cancer. Androgen suppression therapy is dose-dependent, with higher levels required to attain optimal treatment benefit. This optimal benefit requires testosterone levels at or below castration level in order to diminish the size and spread of prostate cancer. Consequently, serum testosterone is measured prior to and during the course of treatment to assess patient survival rates and outcomes. In certain instances, there have been reports of a treatment "breakthrough," an escape from testosterone suppression indicative of a treatment failure. Such events indicate continuous challenges in the management of patients with prostate cancer. Urologists benefit from learning about the newest developments in androgen suppression therapy. This includes information on the dosage-based efficacy and safety data from current clinical trials. This knowledge can be applied in medical practice to improve outcomes in patients with prostate cancer.

 Speakers: Andrew McCullough, M.D. & John Mulhall, M.D. "Optimizing Penile Rehabilitation After Radical Prostatectomy: Analysis of the Concept of Cavernal Oxygenation "

NEEDS ASSESSMENT: High survival rates in men undergoing radical prostatectomy (RP) have increased the attention given to and the perceived significance of erectile dysfunction (ED) in this population. ED has a significant negative impact on the patient's quality of life and self-esteem. A number of pathophysiologic mechanisms have been implicated in ED following RP, and nerve-sparing techniques do not appear to be sufficient to prevent sexual impairment. Even among men in whom bilateral nerve sparing is achieved, erectile function may take up to 24 months to return. Aiming to decrease the time to recovery of spontaneous erections after RP, Montorsi and colleagues in 1997 pioneered the use of early intracavernosal injections of alprostadil for penile rehabilitation. The overall concept of penile rehabilitation is to prevent cavernous tissue damage during neural recovery, in part by providing adequate oxygenation to the cavernous tissues. The Montorsi study prompted further interest in early intervention to ensure the recovery of penile erections, and the next logical step was to look at oral pharmacotherapy to restore nocturnal erections as another way to increase oxygenation of the cavernosal bodies. Although evidence from studies on penile rehabilitation after RP supports the tissue oxygenation concept, the rationale and mechanism for its use in penile rehabilitation programs has not been fully elucidated nor have results t

 Speakers: David I. Quinn, MBBS (Hons), MD, Pt "Emerging Role of Selective Estrogen Receptor Modulators in Prostate Cancer"

NEEDS ASSESSMENT: Selective estrogen receptor modulators (SERMs) are an emerging treatment in the prevention and treatment of adverse effects related to androgen deprivation therapy (ADT). Used in the treatment of prostate cancer, androgen deprivation therapy suppresses testosterone levels, consequently controlling the growth and extent of prostate cancer. However, current treatments have demonstrated significant adverse effects including osteoporosis, hot flashes, and gynecomastia. As prostate cancer is the second-leading cause of cancer mortality among males in the US, and HGPN is the most significant risk factor for the disease, prostate neoplastic disorders are a significant healthcare issue. It is imperative for urologists who treat prostate cancer to learn about the recent advances in disease management using SERMs for preventing the progression of HGPN to prostate cancer, including the role of androgen deprivation therapy, optimal management of isolated HGPN, and management of the adverse effects of ADT.

Speaker: Michael Brawer, M.D. "Advances in the Diagnosis of Prostate Cancer: The Role of PCA3"

NEEDS ASSESSMENT: Prostate cancer is the second leading cause of cancer mortality in men. In 2008 alone, approximately 186,000 men will be diagnosed and almost 29,000 men will die from the disease in the United States. This disease has been traditionally diagnosed using transrectal biopsy and biomarkers such as PSA. Often patients have elevated biomarker levels but negative findings on biopsy, complicating diagnosis and management options. Newer biomarkers such as PCA3 have shown increased accuracy in the monitoring and diagnosing of prostate cancer, improving present and future patient outcomes. A program focusing on PCA3 as a diagnostic biomarker should explain the implications of missing prostate cancer in a biopsy, discuss factors which may predict missed prostate cancer, evaluate biomarkers for monitoring and diagnosis, and formulate appropriate treatment approaches.
